A work on heraldry, by Paul Gruendel, recently published at Leipzig, contains some information on the subject of sealing wax and the rules governing its use in the days of old. White wax was for the kings of France, and later for the kings of Sicily. A few dukes were allowed the high privilege, through the generosity of Frederick III. Red wax was for the pope and the German monarchs, but as a mark of favor to the people, it was allowed to be used generally. Green wax "was for the common people, and some cities which had been faithful to their government were compelled over afterward, as a mark of their shame, to seal all public documents with green wax."

LONDON A DULL CITY.

Thousands Endure It That They May Pose as Londoners.

There is a reason why multitudes of Londoners are probably duller than any other people in the world. It is because they stay in London and endure its dullness and discomforts for the sake of an empty honor, the honor of calling themselves Londoners.

There are people who drag out a dismal life in a dreary suburb solely for the purpose of showing country cousins from time to time round the metropolis, with as much proprietorial pride as if they had personally built the city and fitted it up at considerable expense, with its various attractions.

If they are miserable here, they have the satisfaction of thinking that they are thought to be happy in their native village. They may not even know they are miserable. They are hypnotized by the magic of London, and almost imagine that they are being swept along in the whirl of dissipation which is in many places supposed to be its normal state.

There are other people so infatuated that, without any ties to keep them here or any liking for a life in town, they stay 11 months in London so as to enjoy the glory of touring their friends in the provinces during the remaining month, feted and honored as befits notabilities arriving straight from the headquarters of rank, riches, culture, luxury and wit, even though they may be only such as are obtainable in a two-story red brick "mansion" near Clapham Junction.

Their position and prestige are as assured as those of the eminent statesman who, when traveling on the continent, found he could secure the best of everything by mentioning casually that he was at home an "elector of Middlesex."

London to such people is like a bankrupt nobleman who does not pay his tradesman on the principle that being known to have him for a customer is a valuable advertisement and enough in itself.

Two Marks of Beauty.

Beautiful eyes and brows are, in one sense, a special gift of nature. Many a plain woman is redeemed by fine eyes; many a pretty face spoiled by red-rimmed, dull, listless eyes. But at the same time a great deal may be done to make even unpromising eyes clear and attractive, to render eyes which are only passably pretty really beautiful.

Attention to the general health will go far to make the eyes clear and bright and prevent fatigue, even when they are called upon to do a great deal of work.
Have you ever noticed the dull eyes of a person afflicted with dyspepsia, the yellow tinge of over-feeding and neglected liver; the listless eyes of the woman who sleeps in an ill-ventilated room, who takes no exercise and spends all her time reading novels over the fire?

From a Burglar's Note Book

I had retired—as I thought, permanently—but the old yearning for gain and adventure had swept me from my moorings, and I was once more on the road making a little professional tour and meeting with the usual nocturnal adventures and varying degrees of success. When, one gloomy night, I had been committed the fatal mistake which brought to a sudden termination.

But I will not anticipate. It will be better to relate the happenings of that ill-starred night in their proper sequence.

Standing well back from the highway, on a slightly eminence, in the outskirts of a thriving village, I had noticed a large mansion, with well-kept lawns, extensive grounds, and other external evidences (as viewed from a distance), of being the abode of wealth and luxury.

I naturally supposed it to be the country residence of some millionaire, and although the owner doubtless was not expecting a call from me, I resolved to extend to myself the freedom of his luxurious abode at the earliest opportunity and carry off, if luck permitted, a few specimens of plate and other souvenirs of the occasion.

So the first dark night, armed with the necessary tools and my trusty revolver, I strolled out to the neighborhood of the imposing mansion along about midnight, and greatly to my surprise found no trouble whatever in making my way into the grounds.

There was a large iron gate at the entrance, but it was not locked, nor was there any watch dog on guard. When I reached the house I saw what I had not before noticed, that there were heavy bars to all the windows. This struck me as strange, but some wealthy householders have peculiar notions, and I chuckled to myself at the idea which the owner of this place evidently entertained that the window bars furnished an added security to his valuables. Just as though a genuine housebreaker minded such a trifle as a half-inch wrought iron bar!

Selecting a convenient window I produced a chilled steel saw from my kit of tools and made short work of the bars. Then prying open the window catch with a thin knife blade, designed for that purpose, I cautiously raised the sash and crawled inside.
